FR. BEN'S COLUMN

Love those at your gate

My uncle Jim was a very fine man. He was gracious, kind, a hard worker, a good son and brother, and a great uncle. In his youth, he was a talented musician and was self-taught to play the piano. He would sing at parties, and loved to spend time with my uncles, aunts, and his nieces and nephews. Like many in his generation, he was a fierce drinker. When he was younger, he would go out to the pub with my grandfather and uncles on the weekend. He had a ritual which included stripping down to the waist, shaving and washing at the sink, combing the few strands of hair that he had, adding lotion and aftershave, and then dressing in a singlet, shirt, tie, and jacket. He was elegant. After my granddad died, my uncle Jim started to go out to drink during the week, at first, once or twice. He kept up his grooming regimen but over time, this ended, and he would go out drinking every night. At this stage, he always drank alone. He remained kind and genial, but he was more guarded about his generosity. Eventually, when he retired, he would rise early and go to a pub and stay there until closing time. Then he would look for another late-night bar and spend his time there. Eventually, he didn't even go home. He would find a place to sleep in a trailer, or store front, so that he was close to the pub when it opened. Toward the end, he pretty much looked like a ragged, disheveled, down-and-out, derelict. Actually, Uncle Jim was very wealthy and carried thousands of pounds around with him because he was always afraid he might not have enough for the next drink.

I guess this next part of the story happened when I was about fourteen years of age. A group of friends and I were going into the city to see a movie. This involved taking a bus into the city center and walking to O'Connell Street, the main avenue in Dublin city center. It must have been winter as the evenings were dark early, cold, and wet. Nevertheless, spirits were high. After the movie, we crossed the street to get burgers at McDonald's. As we made our way to the bus, we passed a lot of store fronts, many of which had recessed entrances. It was not unusual to see homeless people sleeping in these recesses, trying to get in out of the cold and the damp. Typically, all you saw was a figure wrapped in a pile of dirty blankets. As we came upon one such sad figure, I realized that I knew him. It was my Uncle Jim! Here on the premier street of Dublin, in the cold, the dark, the damp, late at night, was my down-and-out drunken uncle, sleeping on the street. I didn't know if he was alive or dead, sick, or hurt, in need of help or just sleeping it off. In that moment, my first thought was not for my uncle but was for my own image. I thought: "What would my friends think if they knew this was my uncle?" And so, I passed by and left him there.

I should have stopped; I should have at least checked that he was not hurt. I could have put him in a taxi and sent him home; I could at least have made sure he was alive. I can't tell you the name of any of the four or five boys I went to the movies with that evening, but at that moment what they thought of me was more important than taking care of my own uncle, my own flesh and blood, a man who had always been kind, generous and loved me. Of course, I was fourteen years old and more concerned with image than anything else. Nevertheless, even at fourteen years of age, reflecting on that incident, I determined I would never betray doing the right thing again.

We can allow lots of things distract us from doing the important, essential, good, and loving things. The rich man in the Gospel never saw the poor man at the gate because he was blind. He could only see himself, his image, his fortune, his position, his status; these were his major concerns in life. Looking only to his own best interests, he couldn't see anyone else. The people around us, wife/husband, son/daughter, mother/father, priest, neighbor, friend, fellow worker, people in need, whoever, don't have to be destitute like Lazarus. The truth is that God has placed them at our "gate." God asks us to care for them, help them, even love them. Everyone is rewarded by God for the love they share with others, and He will care for those who cared for His children.

MISCELLANEOUS

PROJECT RACHEL MINISTRY – The Project Rachel Ministry has helped women and men receive healing and forgiveness for those who have lost a child through abortion. Knowing what we know now, there are relatives, friends, partners, and others involved in the experience who also suffer the loss of the unborn child. All involved in an abortion experience can honor the child and have an opportunity to heal while grieving and mourning their loss. The Office for Respect Life Ministries offers weekend retreats and support groups for the mothers, and a Day of Reflection for anyone affected by abortion. We invite you to: "Look into your heart, listen to the voice of God. Help yourself by accepting His love and forgiveness."
